Who Exactly Is the "Prince of Persia" in Daniel 10?

Sixbert SANGWA • May 01, 2024

In the tenth chapter of Daniel, a part of the Bible that is rich in symbolism and apocalyptic imagery, a figure known as the "Prince of Persia" is introduced. This character is generally believed to represent an evil spiritual being that had a certain degree of power over the ancient kingdom of Persia.

Daniel, a prophet, was deeply troubled by a vision of a significant war, which he had been shown (Daniel 10:1). Disturbed by this, he entered a three-week phase of mourning, fasting, and prayer. To help Daniel understand his vision, God dispatched a heavenly messenger, who, intriguingly, was obstructed by the "Prince of the Persian kingdom" for exactly three weeks (Daniel 10:13). This suggests the "Prince of Persia" could be a fallen angel with the capacity to exert influence over the kingdom of Persia.

In the broader context of Daniel 10, Daniel's prayers are focused on the future of his people and their exile in Persia. A heavenly angel is sent with answers to his prayers, however, the demonic "Prince of Persia" hampers this messenger, which fits logically, as the divine answer foretells the downfall of the Persian Empire. The angelic messenger finally receives help from the archangel Michael, who is considered a prince of Israel in the angelic realm (Daniel 10:13, 21).

The angelic messenger subsequently predicts more spiritual warfare, stating that he will return to combat the "Prince of Persia" and later, the "Prince of Greece" (Daniel 10:20). History, corroborated by prophecies in Daniel, indicates that Greece emerged as the next world power after Persia, ruling over Israel for a period of time. This passage mentions spiritual entities associated with three earthly nations: Persia, Greece, and Israel (represented by Michael). This highlights the New Testament's assertion that our struggle is not against flesh and blood, but against the spiritual forces of evil (Ephesians 6:12).

This spiritual warfare seems to be mirrored by earthly events. It's unclear if the fate of the spiritual "Prince of Persia" was connected to the physical Persian Empire. However, if his mission was to maintain the Persian Empire's dominance over Israel, he was unsuccessful. Modern-day Iran, which is ancient Persia, continues to seek dominance over or obliteration of Israel. As a Shiite Muslim nation, Iran also persecutes Christian believers, which suggests the spiritual "Prince of Persia" may still be active today. Like all of Satan's minions, his time is limited and he can only operate within the limits God permits to achieve His perfect will.

This narrative is further supported by the book of Revelation (17:10), which states that "five have fallen," referring to the seven heads of the beast. This suggests that the kingdoms of Persia and Greece are part of these fallen heads, further indicating the presence of spiritual entities operating behind these kingdoms.
